

Dr. Joerg Elbers

He is a German geographer from Ruhr University, Bochum, Germany, with a Doctor of Natural Sciences from Heinrich Heine University, Düsseldorf, Germany, and a diploma in Holistic Science and Economics for Transition of Schumacher College in Dartington, England.

He has over 20 years' experience in international cooperation and university education; he has been manager of projects and programs in conservation, sustainability and social development with a focus on Latin America; he has worked in policy development, organizational learning and curriculum development.

He currently works as an independent consultant in environment, development and holistic thinking. He teaches university courses and facilitates workshops on environment, climate change, holistic thinking, theory U, organizational learning, civilizational paradigms and alternatives to development. He is dedicated to the communicating of real climate change, disseminating holistic thinking and sensing in Latin America and searching for alternatives to development.

Contact:

Joerg Elbers

La Paz - Bolivia

elbers.joerg@gmail.com